National Security Decision Making Processes in Israel: A Typology

יום שני, 11.1.2010 בשעה 11:00

חדר ישיבות
בנין אפל אדרי (חכשורי)
(ליד לשבס יידוק בים חכשורי)

xCEMFOO.notes@idi.cac.edu.il

לואט המדריך לתחכונית המלאת
https://portal.idc.ac.il/He/schools/Government/Research/Pages/lauderschoolseminar.aspx

נשמח לראותכם!
Invitation to the Lauder School of Government, Diplomacy and Strategy Faculty Seminar

A lecture by:

Dr. Chuck Freilich
Former Deputy National Security Advisor, Israel
Senior Fellow, Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs, Harvard University on:

National Security Decision Making Processes in Israel: A Typology

Monday, January 11, 2010, 11:00 p.m.
Boardroom (next to the dean's office)
Efi Arazi Building (communication Building),

Abstract
This article presents a first of its kind typology of Israeli national security decision making processes, focusing on five primary pathologies and a number of strengths. It will demonstrate that these pathologies are the product of an extraordinarily compelling external environment and domestic structural factors: chiefly, the extreme politicization of the decision-making process stemming from the proportional representation electoral system, the consequent need to govern through coalition cabinets, and the absence of effective cabinet-level decision making support capabilities.

To the Seminar Homepage:
https://portal.idc.ac.il/He/schools/Government/Research/Pages/lauderschoolseminar.aspx