The Physiology of Love and the holistic nature of the Mental

Thursday, November 24, 2011, 10:00, Faculty room,
IDC Herzliya Campus

Many believe that there is a tension between the holistic character of the mental and identity claims of the form: "love is a particular neurological state". I will argue that this tension results from a narrow conception of the rational relations constitutive of the mental. Once such a conception is rejected, the tension is resolved. I will show that by considering the differences between the ways the concepts of 'belief' and that of 'love' are embodied within the holistic network of the mental.
